A routine that ate a workweek

THE PROBLEM

Stonehouse was playing all defense, no offense. The monthly P&L was too slow, and ownership had no real sense of their COGS or labor — or where those numbers should land against best-in-industry benchmarks. The management routine was checking the bank balance and waiting to hear from the bookkeeper once a month, by which point any mistake was already baked in.

WHAT THEY DID

Stonehouse adopted Breadcrumbs' full reporting suite — operational summaries, descending budgets, and live KPIs — to get ahead of the numbers instead of reacting to them a month late.

THE RESULT · FIRST 120 DAYS

- $28,000+ saved in prime costs — caught before month-end, not after
- Every KPI in one place, instead of scattered across the POS, the bank, and a bookkeeper's monthly recap
- The books closed from bed on a Sunday morning — a routine that used to eat the better part of a workweek

> Our KPIs are finally in one place. I closed the books on a Sunday morning, in bed.
